Property Description

In Lindora, Santa Ana, this Mediterranean inspired villa by renowned architect Federico Castro offers timeless detailing and an easy connection between indoor and outdoor living. The home is defined by graceful arches, exposed wood beams, soaring ceilings, and expansive terraces on both levels. Located on the western side of the Central Valley of Costa Rica, natural materials carry throughout, including marble floors and solid wood finishes that bring warmth and a sense of permanence to the interiors. The main level was conceived with entertaining in mind. Entry through double doors leads to a welcoming foyer with access to the second floor and the principal social areas. A generous living room and dining room sit on either side and connect through a central square arch, creating a layout that reads as open while still feeling composed. From the social spaces, doors open to the outdoors, anchored by a main covered terrace that opens through a series of arches to the garden and pool.
