Property Description

Casa Rock Star takes its name from a defining natural element within the home: a monumental boulder that moves through the living room and bedroom and provides access to the roof, which currently serves as a yoga deck. The house is built not just in nature, but around it. A solid concrete roof offers the structural possibility of becoming the ground level of a future second floor, while today it provides effective insulation that keeps the interior notably quiet during the rainy season. The open-concept living area flows into a kitchen with dining space, extending seamlessly toward a covered outdoor area that functions equally well as an alfresco dining room or a secondary living space. From here, a wraparound deck overlooks the Tálari River, reinforcing the home's constant connection to its surroundings. A kitchen garden with raised beds and an outdoor dipping pool add to the sense of a self-contained retreat shaped by daily interaction with the land.
