Property Description

FINCA HACIENDA TIQUIRES The natural forest present in these farms has very particular characteristics because it represents four Holdridge life zones that all converge with each other in the same area. This implies that there is notorious variability in biodiversity, soil, climate and other abiotic factors. For its part, the Montano Bajo very humid forest life zone, although it had a large area in the country, has been urbanized and used for crops, mainly coffee, which is common in neighboring farms to Hacienda Tiquires, being represented only in this area. The Montano Bajo rain forest area is the highest part of the property, in the vicinity of the Agua Buena Row, it is part of a small area with a pluvial regime that stretches towards the east where there is almost no forest left, most of which can be seen pastures and recently planted areas of coffee, leaving this redoubt of forest in the farms of Cafetalera del Sur and Hacienda Tiquires.
