Property Description

This Colonial-style 5-bedroom house is located in the canton of Santo Domingo de Heredia, which is part of the greater Metropolitan Area. It is just 8 kilometers from the Capital, San José. This canton is well known because it is home to the National Institute of Biodiversity, which is a center for Research and Management of Costa Rica's biodiversity. Characterized by its cool climate, due to its proximity to a forest on the back of the property, in addition to being a property of 2668 m2 (0.6 acres), it has fruit trees, mango, avocado, citrus, and cas. It is an oasis in the City. The house has a colonial style, with open spaces, and high ceilings, built in 2004 with high-quality materials. Upon entering we find on the right side the kitchen area, a large space with its pantry, and a dining area, next to it we find the TV room which could also be the living room. On the left side of the house, we find the bedroom area on the first floor, 3 large bedrooms with their wooden closet, in this area there are 2 full bathrooms, the fourth bedroom at the end of the corridor is the master bedroom which has its own bathroom and a large closet, large windows overlooking the pool and the green areas of the property.
