Property Description

There are homes that are built. And there are homes that are conceived. Into the Green in Santa Ana, on the western side of the Central Valley of Costa Rica, belongs to the second category, five en suite bedrooms, resort style outdoor living, a heated pool, a private landscaped garden, and interiors designed with a level of detail that feels both sophisticated and livable. Designed by architect Tomás Aguilar within an exclusive Santa Ana community, the home is composed to feel open, private, and quietly impressive from the first moment inside. The facade introduces the tone with travertine, dark wood details, and curated greenery. Inside, a foyer with a travertine column and marble stairs works almost like a private gallery, guiding the eye through the home before arriving at the main social areas. The architecture does not need to announce itself loudly. It reveals its quality through proportion, material, and flow.
