Property Description

This 2-hectare property in Bajo Rodríguez, Costa Rica, is located in a prime agricultural area and offers a unique opportunity for nature-inspired, sustainable development. In the past, renowned biologist Gerardo Herrera Chacón planted a diverse collection of plants on this land, which was once a thriving nursery that supplied plants to other nurseries across Costa Rica. While Gerardo no longer owns the property, his legacy lives on through the variety of plants cultivated here. The land is currently zoned for agricultural use, with four flat plots offering ample space for a project focused on sustainability and harmony with nature. The property is just an hour and a half away from the famous hot springs of La Fortuna and the Arenal Volcano, making it an ideal location for a nature-oriented development. Additionally, the property is only an hour from San Ramón, known for its rich culture, arts scene, and the University of Costa Rica.
